Ed Steimel, a state policy and fundraising giant, died Friday night after spending his adult life fighting to improve quality of life in Louisiana. He was 94.

Steimel made his mark on Louisiana history, first by growing the Public Affairs Research Council of Louisiana, then by effecting change through the Louisiana Association of Business and Industry, and later by raising millions to fund the LSU College of Engineering.

"He took PAR from a very respected but small organization and built it into a statewide powerhouse," said Jim Brandt, a former head of PAR. "He went on to LABI and did the same there."

Steimel was known, among other things, for his work in passing right-to-work legislation and in creating the Louisiana Quality Education Trust Fund to assist higher education and public schools. A right-to-work law guarantees that no one can be compelled, as a condition of employment, to join or not to join a labor union or to pay dues to a union.
